There is nothing simple about the language of tax. And, when it comes to processing the tax impact of corporate actions, understanding the language of tax has become much more critical as a result of the cost basis reporting law. Today, the need to translate tax language into tax accurate data—including IRS Form 8937 information—to adjust the basis of your foreign and domestic securities—is now essential to avoid significant penalties.

Operations departments now need technology that automates delivery of these critical tax details to upload directly into portfolio accounting systems to adjust basis—every day.

Know the law

The cost basis reporting law requires brokers to account for the quantitative effect of corporate actions on the basis of covered securities, including the information reported on an issuer statement—New IRS Form 8937. Since the law does not carve out or provide any exception for foreign securities, foreign corporate actions must also be taken into account.
